About the programme;

A patent is a legal right to an invention given to a person or entity without interference from others who wish to replicate, use, or sell it. Patents are granted by governing authorities and have a time limit, usually 20 years.

A design patent is a form of legal protection granted to the ornamental design of a functional item. Unlike utility patents, which protect the functional aspects of an invention, design patents protect the unique visual appearance or aesthetic features of a product. Design patents protect the non-functional, purely ornamental aspects of a product's design. This can include features such as shape, surface ornamentation, configuration, or a combination thereof. To qualify for a design patent, the design must be novel, non-obvious, and ornamental. This means that it must be new and not obvious to someone skilled in the relevant field, and it must be primarily for aesthetic purposes rather than functional ones.

One-day seminar on “Design Patent” at GIET School of Pharmacy

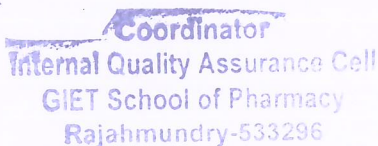

A one-day seminar on “Design Patent” has organized by IQAC Cell, GIET School of Pharmacy, Rajahmundry Andhra Pradesh on 17-09-2022 for teaching staff, PG and UG students.

Dr M LAKSHMI PRASANNA, Professor, VJ’s College of Pharmacy, Rajahmundry acted as a chief guest & speaker and Dr MD Dhanaraju, Principal, GIET School of Pharmacy was presiding over the inaugural function. The welcome address was delivered by T Deepan.

The inaugural function was followed by the Seminar on “Design Patent” presented by Dr M Lakshmi Prasanna. She focuses on Design patents are subject to both the novelty and non-obviousness standards of the patent code. However, because design patents are not measured based on the utility of the designs to which they are directed, there is an open question as to how to measure the non-obviousness of an ornamental design. There is substantial case law, however, on how to evaluate design patent non-obviousness.

a design patent is a form of legal protection granted to the ornamental design of an article of manufacture. Design patents are a type of industrial design right. Ornamental designs of jewelry, furniture, beverage containers and computer icons are examples of objects that are covered by design patents.

ABOUT THE PROGRAMME :

Women entrepreneurship refers to the process of women starting, organizing, and managing their own businesses. Over the years, there has been a significant increase in the number of women entrepreneurs globally, driven by factors such as greater access to education, changing societal norms, increased support networks, and advancements in technology that have lowered barriers to entry in many industries.

Here are some key aspects and challenges related to women entrepreneurship:

Access to Funding: One of the primary challenges for women entrepreneurs is accessing funding. Studies have shown that women often receive less funding compared to their male counterparts, despite demonstrating similar levels of competence and potential for success.

Gender Bias and Stereotypes: Women entrepreneurs often face gender bias and stereotypes in the business world, which can affect their ability to access opportunities, resources, and support networks. Overcoming these biases and stereotypes is crucial for women to succeed in entrepreneurship.

Work-Life Balance: Balancing the demands of entrepreneurship with family and personal life can be particularly challenging for women, who often take on a larger share of caregiving responsibilities.

Networking and Mentorship: Building strong networks and finding mentorship opportunities are vital for the success of women entrepreneurs. Access to mentorship from experienced entrepreneurs can provide valuable guidance, support, and access to resources.

Role Models: Having visible role models and examples of successful women entrepreneurs can inspire and empower other women to pursue entrepreneurship.

Access to Markets and Opportunities: Women entrepreneurs may face barriers when trying to access certain markets or opportunities, particularly in male-dominated industries. Breaking into these markets often requires persistence, resilience, and strategic networking.

Supportive Policies and Programs: Government policies and programs aimed at supporting women entrepreneurship, such as access to loans, training programs, and networking events, can play a crucial role in leveling the playing field and fostering an environment where women can thrive as entrepreneurs.

Despite these challenges, women entrepreneurship has been on the rise globally, contributing significantly to economic growth, innovation, and job creation. Encouraging and supporting women to pursue entrepreneurship can lead to greater gender equality and socioeconomic development.

About the program:

Foreign patent rights refer to the legal protections granted to inventors or assignees in countries outside their home country. When a patent is granted in a specific country, it typically provides exclusive rights to the inventor or assignee to prevent others from making, using, selling, or importing the patented invention within that country's jurisdiction. However, these rights are limited to the territory of the country where the patent is granted. In order to obtain patent protection in foreign countries, inventors must apply for patents in each desired country individually or through international patent treaties and agreements. Foreign patent rights in India refer to the protection and enforcement of patents granted to individuals or entities from outside India for their inventions within the territory of India. Here's an overview of how foreign patent rights work in India:

Foreign individuals or entities can file patent applications in India through the Indian Patent Office either directly or via the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT) route. The PCT route allows applicants to file a single international application that can be used to seek patent protection in multiple countries, including India.

About the programme:

Entrepreneurship refers to the process of starting, managing, and running a business venture with the aim of making a profit. Entrepreneurs are individuals who take on the risks associated with starting a new business or developing an innovative idea, often with limited resources or uncertain outcomes. Entrepreneurship involves creativity, innovation, leadership, and a willingness to take calculated risks. Entrepreneurs often introduce new products, services, or processes to the market, creating value and addressing unmet needs. Entrepreneurship involves taking calculated risks, whether financial, reputational, or personal, in pursuit of business opportunities. Successful entrepreneurs typically have a clear vision for their business and the ability to inspire and lead others toward achieving that vision.

Entrepreneurs often operate with limited resources, requiring them to be resourceful in finding solutions to challenges and leveraging available opportunities. Entrepreneurship involves navigating through uncertainties and adapting to changing market conditions, customer preferences, and technological advancements. Building a successful business often requires perseverance and resilience in the face of setbacks and obstacles.

A great entrepreneur must be able to effectively communicate, sell, focus, learn, and strategize. An ability to continuously learn is not just a key entrepreneurial skill, but also a very valuable life skill. Growing a business requires a sound strategy based on inherent business sense and skills.

The word “entrepreneur” originates from a thirteenth-century French verb, entreprendre, meaning “to do something” or “to undertake.” By the sixteenth century, the noun form, entrepreneur, was being used to refer to someone who undertakes a business venture.

Research is also under way to find better and faster ways to test drugs for safety and effectiveness.

For example, NIH scientists are working with researchers in the Department of Defense and the FDA to develop “tissue chips,” miniature systems made with living human cells and tissues.

In the future, the tissue chips might provide a way to reduce animal testing, make sure that the results of drug tests reflect the drugs’ actions in human beings, and get new drugs approved more quickly.

ABOUT THE PROGRAMME

Research methodology refers to the systematic process of planning, conducting, and analyzing research. It encompasses the strategies, techniques, and procedures used by researchers to gather, analyze, and interpret data in order to answer research questions or test hypotheses. Research methodology varies across different disciplines and research designs, but generally includes the following key components:

This involves the overall plan or structure of the research study, including the selection of a suitable research approach such as qualitative, quantitative, or mixed methods, as well as the specific research methods to be employed. Researchers choose appropriate methods to collect data based on their research questions and objectives. Common data collection methods include surveys, interviews, experiments, observations, and document analysis. Sampling involves selecting a subset of individuals or units from a larger population to study.

Ensuring the validity (the extent to which a study accurately reflects or measures what it claims to measure) and reliability (the consistency and stability of research findings) of research findings is crucial in maintaining the integrity of the study. Researchers must adhere to ethical principles and guidelines throughout the research process, including obtaining informed consent from participants, ensuring confidentiality, and minimizing harm. These are the tools or instruments used to collect data, such as surveys, questionnaires, interview guides, or experimental materials. Researchers design and pilot-test these instruments to ensure their effectiveness and reliability. Researchers interpret the findings of their study in light of the research questions or hypotheses and report their results in academic papers, reports, or presentations following standard formats and conventions.

One-day seminar on “Research Methodology” at GIET School of Pharmacy

A one-day seminar on “Research Methodology” has organized by IQAC Cell, GIET School of Pharmacy, Rajahmundry Andhra Pradesh on 13-07-22 for teaching staff, PG and UG students.

Mrs. P. GEETHA BHAVANI, Associate Professor, Vikas Institute of Pharmaceutical Sciences, Rajahmundry acted as a chief guest & speaker and Dr M.D Dhanaraju, Principal, GIET School of Pharmacy was presiding over the inaugural function. The welcome address was delivered by Dr C Gopi.

The inaugural function was followed by the Seminar on “Research Methodology” by Mrs. P. Geetha Bhavani. She said that It's a logical, systematic plan to resolve a research problem. A methodology details a researcher's approach to the research to ensure reliable, valid results that address their aims and objectives. It encompasses what data they're going to collect and where from, as well as how it's being collected and analyzed.

She also said that research methodolog is a structured and scientific approach used to collect, analyze, and interpret quantitative or qualitative data to answer research questions or test hypotheses. A research methodology is like a plan for carrying out research and helps keep researchers on track by limiting the scope of the research. Several aspects must be considered before selecting an appropriate research methodology, such as research limitations and ethical concerns that may affect your research.

ABOUT THE PROGRAMME

Writing a research paper involves several key steps and considerations to ensure that your paper is well-organized, well-researched, and effectively communicates your findings or arguments. Here's a step-by-step guide to writing a research paper: Select a topic that interests you and is relevant to your field of study. Make sure it is neither too broad nor too narrow. Create an outline that organizes your paper into sections such as introduction, literature review, methodology, results, discussion, and conclusion. This will serve as a roadmap for your writing. Start with an engaging introduction that provides background information on your topic, states the purpose of your research, and outlines the structure of your paper. Provide enough detail so that other researchers could replicate your study if necessary. Present your findings in a clear and logical manner using tables, figures, or graphs as needed. Describe the results of your analysis without interpreting them at this stage. Interpret your results in the context of existing literature, discussing any implications, limitations, or future research directions. Address how your findings contribute to the understanding of the topic. Summarize the main findings of your research and restate the significance of your work. Avoid introducing new information in the conclusion.

Research is also under way to find better and faster ways to test drugs for safety and effectiveness.

For example, NIH scientists are working with researchers in the Department of Defense and the FDA to develop “tissue chips,” miniature systems made with living human cells and tissues.

In the future, the tissue chips might provide a way to reduce animal testing, make sure that the results of drug tests reflect the drugs’ actions in human beings, and get new drugs approved more quickly.

Research is also under way to find better and faster ways to test drugs for safety and effectiveness.

For example, NIH scientists are working with researchers in the Department of Defense and the FDA to develop “tissue chips,” miniature systems made with living human cells and tissues.

In the future, the tissue chips might provide a way to reduce animal testing, make sure that the results of drug tests reflect the drugs’ actions in human beings, and get new drugs approved more quickly.

Research is also under way to find better and faster ways to test drugs for safety and effectiveness.

For example, NIH scientists are working with researchers in the Department of Defense and the FDA to develop “tissue chips,” miniature systems made with living human cells and tissues.

In the future, the tissue chips might provide a way to reduce animal testing, make sure that the results of drug tests reflect the drugs’ actions in human beings, and get new drugs approved more quickly.

ABOUT THE PROGRAMME

Intellectual property rights refer to the legal rights given to individuals or organizations over the creations of their minds, such as inventions, literary and artistic works, designs, and symbols used in commerce. These rights are protected by various legal mechanisms, including patents, copyrights, trademarks, and trade secrets. The main purpose of intellectual property protection is to encourage and reward creative work, stimulate innovation, and provide protection for the results of investment in the development of new technology. This protection is usually given for a limited period, after which the intellectual property enters the public domain. Intellectual Property Rights (IPR) refer to legal rights that are granted to individuals or entities for creations of the mind. These rights enable creators and inventors to protect their intellectual creations or innovations and provide them with exclusive rights over their use and distribution for a specified period. There are several types of intellectual property rights, including: Patents protect inventions or discoveries, granting the inventor the exclusive right to use, manufacture, and sell the invention for a certain period, usually 20 years from the date of filing the patent application. Copyrights protect original works of authorship, such as literary, artistic, musical, and dramatic works, as well as software, films, and architectural designs. Copyright gives the creator the exclusive right to reproduce, distribute, perform, display, or license their work for a specified period, typically the life of the author plus 70 years.

Trademarks protect symbols, names, logos, slogans, or any other distinctive sign that identifies and distinguishes products or services of one party from those of others. Trademark rights prevent others from using similar marks in a way that may cause confusion among consumers. Trade secrets protect confidential business information, such as formulas, processes, designs, or customer lists, that provide a competitive advantage to a business. Unlike patents, which require public disclosure, trade secrets must be kept confidential to maintain their protection. Industrial designs protect the visual design or aesthetic appearance of a product, such as its shape, configuration, or ornamentation. Industrial design rights prevent unauthorized copying or imitation of the design by others. Geographical indications identify goods as originating from a specific geographical location, where a particular quality, reputation, or characteristic of the product is attributable to its place of origin. GIs protect traditional products and promote rural development by enhancing the market value of products associated with a particular region. Effective protection of intellectual property rights encourages innovation, creativity, and economic development by providing incentives for creators and inventors to invest time, effort, and resources into developing new ideas and inventions. It also fosters a competitive marketplace by preventing unfair competition and unauthorized use or exploitation of intellectual assets.

Research is also under way to find better and faster ways to test drugs for safety and effectiveness.

For example, NIH scientists are working with researchers in the Department of Defense and the FDA to develop “tissue chips,” miniature systems made with living human cells and tissues.

In the future, the tissue chips might provide a way to reduce animal testing, make sure that the results of drug tests reflect the drugs’ actions in human beings, and get new drugs approved more quickly.
